

Claims substantiation

16 May 2017

Programme

09.30 Registration & refreshments

10.00 Welcome & introduction

An introduction to the course together with a brief introduction to the general applicable EU & UK regulations affecting claims made on the labelling and in the advertising of food products, including industry guidance and self-regulatory Codes of Practice.

10.15 Misleading claims

An overview of what constitutes a claim for the purposes of the regulations, with consideration to messages communicated in digital content and by audio-visual media. With references to examples and case studies, we look at how consumers can be misled by claims, even when factual information is communicated.

10.45 Legal claims

The compliance of some claims are judged on whether they meet specific regulations, and not what the consumer is likely to take away from them. We look at claims specifically controlled by EU regulations, other than nutrition & health claims, that relate to specific foods & characteristics that apply to all foods.

11.15 Refreshments

11.30 Regulatory decisions: sensory & consumer claims

With reference to rulings published by the UK Advertising Standards Authority (ASA), we look at the regulatory decisions that have been made in relation to sensory & consumer claims in advertising & marketing content, including comparative claims.

12.00 Sensory & consumer substantiation

Following on from real case studies, our Sensory & Consumer specialist will present examples of current sensory claims, methods to substantiate them and relevant protocols and standards that should be met to ensure evidence is robust and relevant to substantiate a specific claim.
